This book has all the secrets between the covers about how to make the most fashionable shoe by hand on a traditional way. The book «Handmade Shoe for Men» gives a thorough insight in traditional shoemaker craftsmanship, but real without to be a textbook in the trade, but shows these practices in some of the world's leading shoemakers' workshops as have survived the 19th and 20th century's industrialism. And in some as have come later. And as is among others in towns as London, New York, Munich, Vienna, Rome or Budapest. The authors of the book are László Vass and Magda Molnár. The photos are by George Valerius. The book has over 400 photos spread over 216 pages. And is even richly illustrated with excellent written texts spread over 8 respective chapters, the whole started by an introduction written by László Vass. All together have the chapters 150 different mentions/sections, this including addition as a glossary, bibliography etc. The texts build from chapter to chapter and inside the chapters up the understanding of the topic on a relatively easy way. I.e.: if you know a little in advance how shoes are made is't an advantage but not an assumption for an experienced reader of the book's content as immediately for an outsider perhaps can be strange and far away in the globalized industry running race age where shoes of so many different qualities are in the trade. Outwards the reading experience and the insight the book gives about this type of traditional shoemakers' craftsmanship can it perhaps also be the first step in to the trade. Or simply enough: give something to have with you on a city holiday, on a rainy day.
